

House Rules for Young Learner forums

---

We are pleased to welcome you to your British Council class forum. It's here just for you, your classmates and teacher. We hope you enjoy using it and find it a useful and productive environment to exchange ideas and improve your English. Before you join, please read through the house rules below and show your agreement by ticking the box at the bottom.

➤ No rude or nasty comments

We would like you to use your English to give your opinions, and we would like to hear what you think, but please don't write rude or nasty comments, or comments that start an argument. Just be polite!

➤ Only use English

Always use English - and then everyone can understand. One reason we have these forums is to give you a chance to practice the English you learn with us and making mistakes is part of this learning process.

➤ Be careful what you post on the forum

Be careful what files and links you post on the website. We do not want you to post material that will offend forum members or others, or post material that you are not allowed to share (they are not your own work, copyrighted, etc.) If you are not sure, please ask your teacher, your parents, or the forum administrators (see contact details below).

➤ Use the forum to communicate

Use the forum to communicate with your teacher and classmates, not other applications and devices. So please do not post mobile phone numbers, social media and messenger IDs, addresses and surnames etc on the forum.

➤ Keep your password safe

Don't give your password to other people, or post your password on the forum. If other people have your password, they can look at your profile, and they can post content onto the site in your name.

➤ Breaking the house rules

If you see any content on the forum that you think breaks any of these rules or that you find offensive, please hit the "report abuse" button and the British Council will deal with the matter. And if you break any house rules yourself, we may have to remove your posts in order to keep the forum a friendly and constructive place to improve your English.
